Colonel McRae's allusion to Horace Greeley's being a mechanic, a printer-boy and journey man printer, is most felicitous. Colonel McRae does not overestimate the effect which the election of such a man would have upon the young men of the country. It would be equivalent to saying to them: Take heart that the poorest and humblest young man may occupy the proudest station of the country, if he is only true to himself, true to integrity, sober, honest and a new young a new young and man may occupy the proudest station of the country, if he is only true to himself, true to integrity, sober, honest and
